In following COCA's mission to deliver thought-provoking programs and train informed young theatre artists who will advocate for change within the theatre and our society, we have decided to include the mature content and language of The Wolves.

Including the mature language helps fully capture the frustration, hardships, and reality of adolescence. As the teens stand at the precipice of youth and adulthood, they are simultaneously sheltered by the bubble of the soccer dome and thrust into the raging politics of the outside world. Because of this semi-awareness and their American socialization into elitism, white supremacy, ableism, and more, the teens say many problematic statements and microaggressions.

Rather than depicting youth as pure and uncorrupted, we have chosen to show their uncensored conversations. These discussions help us understand youth holistically, as complex humans with both trauma and biases.
